President
Reports to: Board of Directors

THE COMMUNITY
Alamance County, located between the Triangle and Piedmont Triad, was officially established in 1849 and named after the Alamance Creek, which runs through the region. Alamance County has a population of 174,900, an increase of 14% over the past decade. The county’s median household income is approximately $48,000 and 37% of all residents are considered low-income.

Alamance County is home to several institutions, including Alamance Community College and Elon University, which contribute to the educational landscape of the area. The county also has a mix of industries, with manufacturing, healthcare, and education being key sectors of employment. Additionally, Alamance County is known for its agricultural heritage, with farming playing a significant role in the local economy.

One of Alamance County’s greatest assets is a diverse and vibrant nonprofit landscape that plays a crucial role in supporting the local community. From organizations focused on social services, healthcare, education, and housing, to those dedicated to arts and culture, there is a wide array of nonprofits making a positive impact in the region. United Way of Alamance relies heavily on our nonprofit partners to collaborate and solve some of the county’s most pressing needs.
